The Story

The Trigger:

Back in 2014 a corporate expert who had been working with various multinational businesses for almost three decades was approached by a client looking to set up a business of his own and so to say demanded this expert to be his only 'go to' place for A to Z services required to establish an entity, get it up and running and monitor operations until it was 'Action' over 'Activity'. This startup wasn't huge but had now become a challenge because it was soon realized that no matter how facilitating he wanted to be he still had to chase after a couple of other consultancies as well, since his own firm and others only offered a narrow range of services.

The Search:

The expert started by looking for service providers who could individually accommodate the business needs pertinent to their service lines. Not very surprisingly, he found himself in a plethora of quotations, so to name for one service the first estimate he got was $600. The second was $800 and third was a whopping $1300, $1300!!! How could there be such a difference in price for exact same service. Needless to say he chose to get it done for $600 but couldn't forget how unhappy he had been with the process. With the quest still fresh he decided to reach his 'go to' place; two friends he trusted the most with business management solutions credited to their passion to solve problems efficiently and expertise they bagged from working with The Big 4 for over a decade in different regions. With the trio working together, there had to be a better way and so it was – Gadlang was born.

The Answer:

Gadlang's goal is to make all business processes simpler at a single stop serving all business needs under one roof. No one should have to drive around from firm to firm to get completely different estimates for the same service or to get different services dealing with a number of people.
